Grief services falling through cracks of COVID response

October 28, 2020 – WINNIPEG - As Canada marks the tragic milestone of 10,000 deaths due to COVID-19, the demand for grief services is rising and many have little or no access to grief support.

The Canadian Grief Alliance (CGA), a group of leading grief specialists and more than 150 national and provincial organizations, is encouraging the Government to adopt a proposal to address national gaps in grief services that are leaving hurting Canadians unsupported in their grief.

The CGA applauds the increased investments for mental health services, however, grief services are outside the scope of these programs and are falling through the cracks of the Government's response to COVID-19.

The CGA is calling for:

- a fast-tracked consultation process that will guide a three-year federal investment to improve access to grief supports in communities;
- public education, and
- investment in research to better understanding and respond to pandemic-related grief.

The proposal is supported by leading health, palliative care and bereavement organizations including: the Canadian Medical Association; the Canadian Psychiatric Association; the Canadian Nurses Association; Canadian Association of Social Workers; Canadian Association of Spiritual Care, the Canadian Society of Palliative Care Physicians, and 150 other organizations.

In addition to the 90,000 Canadians grieving COVID deaths, another 1.2 million at the bedside, experiencing isolation, and disrupted rituals like funerals. These Canadians are at increased risk of prolonged and complex grief that can lead to depression, anxiety and thoughts of suicide.

Quotes

"Despite doubling the number of bereavement counsellors and increasing our hours of operation, we still have a 5-6 week waiting list. Since the start of the pandemic, the average number of counselling sessions has doubled from 3 to six – that suggests people are struggling more with their grief."

-Marney Thompson, Director of Psychosocial Services, Victoria Hospice

"The scale of the suffering is difficult to fathom. Right now we have a patchwork of services for those who have lost people who are important to them, that is inadequate in normal times. The pandemic has put new obstacles in the way of those trying to access the supports they need at the same time as it has greatly increased the number of people who need them. Canada needs a coherent policy to address this pandemic of grief."

-Paul Adams, CGA Media Spokesperson

"The need is great and growing. Visitors to MyGrief.ca jumped by 68% in April 2020 over March and through the pandemic remain at double the visits we recorded last year. The greatest service gap is for Indigenous Peoples, Canadians living in rural and remote areas, children, immigrants and refugees, and those providing essential health services. As a country, we need to respond to this growing need."

-Shelly Cory, Executive Director, Canadian Virtual Hospice

Les services d'accompagnement du deuil sont absents de la réponse COVID

Winnipeg, le 28 octobre 2020. – Alors même que le Canada franchit le cap tragique des 10 000 décès dus à la COVID-19, la demande de services d'accompagnement du deuil est en hausse et beaucoup de gens reçoivent peu ou pas de soutien dans leur deuil.

L'Alliance canadienne pour le deuil (ACD) regroupe d'éminents spécialistes du deuil et plus de 150 organisations nationales et provinciales. Elle rappelle que le manque de services d'accompagnement du deuil à l'échelle nationale prive de soutien les Canadiens endeuillés. Elle appelle le gouvernement à adopter une proposition pour remédier à la situation.

L'ACD applaudit certes la hausse des investissements dans les services de santé mentale, mais les services d'accompagnement du deuil ne font pas partie de l'offre de ces programmes et sont absents de la réponse du gouvernement à la COVID-19.

L'ACD demande :

- un processus de consultation accéléré pour encadrer un investissement fédéral de trois ans visant à améliorer l'accès aux services

- un investissement dans recherche pour mieux comprendre le deuil lié à la pandémie et y répondre.

La proposition est appuyée par les principales organisations des domaines de la santé, des soins palliatifs et du deuil, dont l'Association médicale canadienne, l'Association des psychiatres du Canada, l'Association des infirmières et infirmiers du Canada, l'Association canadienne des travailleuses et travailleurs sociaux et l'Association canadienne des soins spirituels, la Société canadienne des médecins de soins palliatifs et 150 autres organisations.

Aux 90 000 Canadiens endeuillés par un décès des suites de la COVID-19 s'ajoutent 1,2 million de Canadiens endeuillés par un décès dû à une autre cause depuis le début de la pandémie. Les restrictions mises en place par la santé publique nuisent à leur travail de deuil en les empêchant d'aller dire adieu à leurs êtres chers, en les contraignant à l'isolement et en perturbant les rituels (funérailles, etc.).

« Même après avoir doublé le nombre de nos thérapeutes du deuil et augmenté nos heures de service, nous avons toujours une liste d'attente de 5 à 6 semaines. Depuis le début de la pandémie, le nombre moyen de séances de counseling a doublé de trois à six, ce qui laisse sous-entendre que les gens ont plus de difficulté à cheminer dans leur deuil. »

- Marney Thompson, directrice des services de psychosociaux, Victoria Hospice

« L'ampleur de la souffrance est difficile à appréhender. L'offre actuelle de services pour les personnes qui ont perdu un être cher est disparate et inadéquate en temps normal. La pandémie est venue compliquer davantage la tâche de ceux qui essaient d'accéder aux services dont ils ont besoin tout en augmentant considérablement le nombre de personnes qui en ont besoin. Le Canada a besoin d'une politique cohérente pour faire face à cette pandémie de deuil. »

- Paul Adams

« Le besoin est grand et croissant. Le nombre de visiteurs sur le site MonDeuil.ca a bondi de 68 % en avril 2020 par rapport à mars et se maintient à autochtones, les Canadiens vivant en milieu rural ou en région éloignée, les enfants, les immigrants, les réfugiés et les fournisseurs de services de santé essentiels. Notre pays se doit de répondre à ce besoin croissant. »
